Chapter 1 by EvilDisney

Hurry! Yes, I know you are confused, but there is no time to explain! The earth god is after you! Why, because you stole her amulet! Run now child! Don't look back!

I wish you luck on your journey!

Chapter 2 by LethalPianist

I still remember that fateful day...The day when Aunt Jen pushed me out of the house. The fear I felt when I looked back at the house and my Aunt's terrified face. The longing that was evident on my face that I wished to go back into the house.

The the ground beneath the house collapsed, swallowing it whole. One second it was there, but then there was nothing but darkness. Choking back my horror and tears, I ran. I didn't look back.

All I had with me was the fifty dollars my Aunt gave me, my phone, and the antique amulet. It had been sitting in the basement, and it looked so entrancing that I just had to touch it. Even back then I felt its power and allure

Now she's after me, I don't know who. I just know that buildings around me seem to crack and fall, that earthquakes plague me. I felt safe when I was on the sea, where I am now.

I looked forlornly at the ship, knowing I was leaving. Hopefully whoever she is, she won't find me there. I'll be safe. I closed my eyes and drifted off to sleep...

"All hands on deck!" The ship captain's voice boomed in the dark. I awoke instantly to a torrent of rain blasting onto the deck. I was confused. I was supposed to be safe. I even felt happy. Then the next shout shattered even the tiniest illusion of safety I had.

"Tsunami!"

Chapter 3 by Karra

How had this happened? How can she haunt me here, i'm not on land! I stumble onto the deck just as the ship pivoted to the left taking me with it. "Careful boy, here tie this around your waist." A man with a kindly face had grabbed me by the arm and was now tying a thick rope around my waist. Over the roar of the waves I heard him shouting at me "This is a slip knot, if you need to undo it just pull this bit here okay." he motioned to part of the rope and I nodded my head making sure I had all my stuff.

Chapter 4 by anyka_mp

An earthquake happens

I stumble back below deck, where my quarters were. My breath caught in my throat, viewing the sight in front of me. The harsh waves from underneath must have ruined the place. My bed was on the other side of the room, the shelf I once had books to read was now broken, and the amulet...wait, where's the amulet?

I internally curse at myself, frantically searching the room for the object. My stomach lurched from the sea sickness I was getting, but I knew I had to ignore the feeling and find the amulet. I ripped away blankets that splayed across the floorboards, until I finally found the amulet. But something wasn't right.

The chain of the amulet was stuck on a piece of wood, but the amulet seemed to be pulling itself in another direction, as if it was trying to escape. I like it had a life of it's own! My fingers graze against the chain but before I could reach it, the amulet won it's fight against the piece of wood it was stuck to. I quickly ran towards the amulet, chasing it up the stairs. This was my last chance to grab it, so I dove forwards. The rain beating down my face wasn't helping with my vision much, but I took a chance, and attempted to grab it.

I felt the chain in my hands.

Smiling in success, I shoved the object in my pocket, preventing it from leaving. What was attracting the amulet? Before I could continue thinking, a bright light shone across my eyes, blinding me for a second before I could adjust to the light. I peered upwards, seeing a dark figure in the presence of the light. She seemed to be speaking to me in my mind.

"Hand me the amulet", she spoke. I grit my teeth, refusing to hand it to her. She seemed to get the memo, as her hands quickly flew upwards, creating massive waves and the sound of cracking earth filled my ears. I was confused as to what was happening, before I heard one of the crewmen shout.

"Earthquake!"

Chapter 5 by Anisa Murray

Everything goes black.

I wake to someone shaking me awake. The most horrid feeling hits me like a brick wall. Sand is in my mouth, I can barely breathe. The amulet... oh, it's in my hand. The dark figure I saw seemed familiar, something I've seen before. I push the thought aside and look at the person staring into my eyes. The person has hazel eyes and hair the color of rich chocolate. I cough and a mixture of sand come up.

"Who are you?" I ask. The girl opens her mouth to respond, but is cut off by a deafening sound.
